FRIDAY EVENING, DEC. 3.

TIGERS IN INDIA. - Dr. Fayrer thinks it probable that, on account of the general disarming of the natives after the mutiny, the number of tigers has increased rather than diminished of late years. Their ravages are certainly appalling. Captain Rogers says that in Lower Bengal alone, during the six years ending in 1866, 13,400 human beings were killed by wild animals, while Government reports state that during the same period and in the same locality, 4,218 of the above fell victims to tigers, while 4,287 were slain by wolves. In the Rangpore district alone, the yearly loss of life is between 55 and 60.

The exploits of individual tigers are even more remarkable. We read of one tiger which, in 1867, 1868, 1869, killed respectively 27, 34 and 47 people. Once it killed a father, mother and three children, within a few moments. This dangerous brute killed 27 persons in the week before it was shot. Another tiger destroyed, during 1856, 1857, 1858, an average of 80 persens annually. A third tiger in 1869 slew 127 people, and stopped up a public road for several weeks till killed by a British sportsman. So great is the awe which this tyrant of the jungle inspires that whole villages are sometimes deserted and all cultivation stopped. A Government report informs us that in the central provinces "a single tigress caused the desertion of thirteen villages, and two bundred and fifty square miles of country was thrown out of cultivation.

The inhabitants of India, especially the Hindoos, believe the tiger to be the abode of an evil spirit, and many would not kill him if they could, for fear of subsequent mischief. So great a dread in some parts of the country is felt by the peasants of his supernatural powers and malevolent disposition, that they either avoid naming him at all, or speak of him as "the jackall" or "the beast." There is almost a universal belief that his flesh, especially his heart, if eaten, produces courage and strength. His whiskers, claws and fangs are also religiously preserved as potent charms.
